CAN OUTGOING PRESIDENT

LEAD U.S. WITH STRENGTH?

Former President Harry S. Truman says that it is inevitable that the world begin paying less attention to the present U.S. Administration and more to the future President over the next months.

But this means that the President must more than ever assert his firm leadership. Mr. Truman speaks of the grave problems confronting the West--the Summit, the situation in Cuba, the Soviet policy of divide and conquer.

And in a thoughtful article, written in his customary straight-from-the-shoulder style, he argues that these problems deserve firm action from the President.

U.S. WILL SEE CUBA

NOT SUBVERTED: HST

The world looks with increasing anxiety at events in Cuba. Will this nation at the backdoor of the U.S. go Red?

In a provocative article on world affairs, former President Harry S. Truman foresees "serious trouble" for the Cuban people. But he assures them that they have the support of the American people.

And, in urging the outgoing U.S. leadership to assert itself firmly, he notes that "this nation once responded to a situation confronting Turkey and Greece

Mr. Truman's views on these questions, on the Paris visit of Khrushchev and on the forthcoming Summit conference, appear exclusively in
